Sojan: My peace to thee, my friends.

I am known among my people as Sojan. This is my first privilege of speaking with you. I shall only take a few moments of your time, but in these few moments we shall discuss a subject that I know is close and dear to the hearts of all of you. For among your people today there is much discussion of the great need of establishing peace among thy people. The urgency of devising ways and means of bringing about peace. But, dear ones, there are also many opinions among your people as to how this is to be brought about. Many advocate the building of great armies, of great stockpiles of war materials to be used to frighten your enemies, so to speak, to impress upon them the importance of your great powers, so that they shall fear to attack. But, my friends, does it seem reasonable that strife can be avoided by continually preparing for strife? Did not your teacher that you call Jesus, state to one of his disciples that "he who lives by the sword shall die by the sword?" Peace shall never come to planet Earth while she prepares for war. The only way peace shall come to your peoples is through a great crusade, impressing the importance of establishing peace within one's own heart. For peace can only come through the heart of man himself. Man must develop within himself a great desire to find peace, to find it within his own being. For there will man establish peace. When no longer the desire rests within man himself to be in conflict with his neighbor or his fellow man, then shall peace come to your peoples.

Each man regardless of his station in life, has somewhere deep within him the desire to find peace, peace with himself. When man has found peace with himself he shall find also that he is at peace with all man. He shall not covet one mite that belongs to his brother. Man must start searching, searching, searching, going deep, deep into his inner consciousness, until eventually he finds the answers that lie within, that will set him at peace. No amount of effort spent in the outer will bring these results, for true peace is found only through a deep search. And until man has reached this peace within, peace shall not reign supreme among your peoples. This is something, my friends, that is needed more than anything else to be planted as seeds in the minds of Earth man, for when enough of your people have found this peace, it shall manifest in the outer in all its glory. It shall come forth as does the rose into a beautiful bloom and man will know something and experience something that is far greater than anything he can conceive in the outer.

So, my dear ones, search diligently for this peace within you and when you have found it, great revelations shall be unfolded in your consciousness. Revelations that will raise you to new heights of understanding, new concepts and an entirely new view of life. But first it is necessary to establish and find this peace within you, within your own being.

So be it, my friends, Peace. ☸
