Special: Peace be with each of you, my beloved friends. With your permission I will speak with you for a few moments.

Man. What is this thing called man who was given dominion over all things by his creator? How could you define this thing called man? In your existence or your plane of existence we see man in a physical chemical body, so to speak. He functions through this chemical body controlling it and its actions through what you call a brain. But here upon another plane of existence we find man functioning much differently. Here he functions in what, to use your terms, you call an astral shell. Here he moves, he thinks, he carries on a life much as you do upon your plane, yet he does not function with a chemical body, nor does he control or manipulate his astral shell through his brain as you do. He finds life is much different in some respects. He finds that thought is much more effective upon this plane. He finds that he brings into being that which he desires by merely creating a thought and promptly his thought comes into being for him. He builds his own surroundings with very little effort on his part and these surroundings and actions will depend entirely upon his ability to think.

Here he is also limited in many ways for he finds himself among the physical beings, for he has been lost so long in his physical existence, through desires that were created within him many eons back in time. He finds this desire which he has continually pushing him, so to speak, to express in the physical or chemical, and oftentimes not realizing exactly where he is, he does not take advantage of the situation that he finds himself in at that time, but rather tries to pull himself back into the physical, chemical plane of existence before his time. Oft times this becomes quite confusing to the unenlightened ones and causes much unhappiness to the individual and oft times through lack of understanding much harm and much inconvenience and suffering is brought to some of those in the physical chemical plane of existence.

What is man? Just what does he consist of? For as we move farther out, we find other planes of existence, other levels of life. As we pause here we find beings of greater understanding. We find beings with greater knowledge of the universe and its functions. We find that these individuals also function in a world of thought, but they have a higher knowledge of the use of this power. They also have greater knowledge of many other powers. They have an understanding of matter to a greater degree. We find that these beings are able, through their power of thought to control and manipulate this matter. They are able to change it to different forms, to bring into being that which they desire and to mold it into whatever suits their purpose at the time. They are able to transport themselves from place to place without the aid of a vehicle if they so desire. Yet if they desire a vehicle in which to travel this can also be created by thought and the manipulation of matter.

Also we find that many of these can bring themselves into your plane of existence and create for themselves a chemical body to be used temporarily as they move among you and then again to be returned to the nothingness from which it came.

What is man? How do we define this man? Shall we go higher? Shall we move from this realm where man lives in a world of thought, yet he lives a life somewhat as yours in that he lives with his fellow man—they work together. They have their homes and their families, but yet so different.

As we move on, we find ourselves surrounded by beings of such great intelligence, of such great light, that our understanding of them is naught. We see nothing but light. These beings have such great knowledge and control of matter, of intelligence, of consciousness that it is beyond our understanding. They have such great knowledge of the universe, they know its functions.

They know of its creation. They understand consciousness. They are able to divide and subdivide their consciousness, sending it out into many spheres and many planes and there expressing, helping to raise the consciousness of these beings on other places that they too might someday move into their plane of consciousness. These beings, I can only state, are pure consciousness.

You ask, is this the ultimate in man and I must answer, I do not believe so, for I understand that man reaches even far beyond this. So beloved friends, how would you define man? I have no definition for man, for man shall we say, is inconceivable. At my level of understanding, I believe I would have to state it so. But man has all of these potentialities and man, sooner or later, shall return to the high states of consciousness from whence he came.

We are gradually climbing step by step. As time is never ending, so is our climb to the ultimate.

Peace be with you, my friends, peace be with you. ☸
