Amos de Phineas: Greetings to you, my beloved children, I am Amos de Phineas.

I was asked to speak with you tonight by the mentors of our two friends here. They have a few things to say to you, and they have chosen me to do this. I am honored,

First, they would like me to say that in both of you they are well pleased. You have labored hard and long. You have reached out a helping hand to many. For this you have asked no reward nor honor. There is much to be done. There are many who are seeking to know the higher truths, and they will be seeking out those such as yourselves. At times, my children, the road may seem hard, the labors long, but believe me, your efforts are not going unnoticed. Your rewards may not be great on the material plane, but the rewards that you receive will be of a much greater nature, rewards that will be reaped at a future time, when your labors here have ceased. You are receiving help from many realms, some of which you are aware and some of which you are not aware. But those who put forth the effort to serve in His light will receive the help. For the willing worker will always receive help from those in other realms who are also working in His Light. You will find the need for your services growing ever greater, and you will find that your strength, your wisdom, and your knowledge will also increase, to meet the demands that shall be thrust upon you. There will be times when you will become discouraged and despaired, perhaps condemned and ridiculed. There will always be those who will crucify you, but know always that those who serve in the everlasting Light will be given the power and the courage to overcome these things. So, in these times, remind yourself that you are servants in His light, and that if He is for you, none can be against you. We have pledged our support, and we will stand upon our pledge. There are many, many searching souls today, looking for something, they know not what, and it is through workers such as we have here tonight that they will find the Light. They will find themselves, they will find God. They will learn that He is not a far off entity, but rather that He dwells within them, and therein will they find Him. And you, my friends, my beloved brothers and sisters, will aid in showing them the way. And what greater satisfaction could one find than in knowing that he aided another in finding his or her self.

Now I perceive that you have some questions. I shall to the best of my ability try to answer them for you. You may proceed.

Questioner: I was particularly interested in trying to get more insight into the relationship of the four great forces of nature, Fire, Earth, Air, and Water, and the mystical relationships of these energies to the creative principle. We hear that Fire and Water are the only agents of cleansing. It seems to me that there must be a combination of pairs, of polarity between these forces that is not clear, at least to my view at this moment, and I am looking for insight into this area.

Amos de Phineas: Water, Fire, Air, are symbolic of the power of God, or perhaps you could say of the positive side of Nature, for God is Nature. Water is symbolic of the cleansing power of God or the creative forces, Fire is a consuming force of nature. It has both a purifying and a consuming nature. One can work either against or with the other. Air is a life giving force. It supplies that which man needs to survive, not only upon the physical plane, but also in the spiritual plane. It not only contains oxygen and hydrogen and many other elements, but it also contains energies, life-giving energies which supply the very life-giving forces for all Nature. Each one of these forces works to help the other. Fire not only supplies warmth and heat for man, but it is also an aid to nature. For instance, the forest fires which bring great fear upon man, are one of Nature's ways of keeping the forest clean, of sweeping out the debris, so to speak. These are all forces of the positive nature of God that control and keep order upon His planets. These forces also react to man. Man through his own knowledge and wisdom can control these forces once he has learned the laws and natures of God. He can control them in such a way that they do not bring destruction to him, but do only their part that they were intended to do in Nature and supply the life-giving forces to man. As you learn more of the occult laws, you will understand and be able to tie together these forces with greater meaning. At the moment, I could not go much farther without getting into great detail and lengthy lessons concerning the control and the nature of each.

You are learning much of this at an unconscious level, shall we say, and when the time is right in the not too far distant future, through certain contacts that you will have, this knowledge will be brought to the surface and you will have a clearer understanding of the entire nature of the Creative Forces. It all ties in together. These three are only a part of the entire picture of the Creative Forces, or what you call God. You have the Love Force, the Wisdom Force, and all of these must be brought into the circle in order to have a complete understanding, and to go a step further, the nature of the Creative Spirit in its entirety is of such a vast magnitude that it is impossible for it to be comprehended by the finite mind because it is infinite. But it can be understood in degrees, and you will reach a state and this is being given to you through many lessons, I could not possibly cover these in the few moments that we have.

You have had many lessons up to now in these fields, and yet your unconscious understanding is only slight, and it is growing, and you are gradually going into a higher understanding of these forces and how they are tied together, the relationship of one to the other, and the importance of each. But, have patience, my friend, have patience and soon the light will begin to dawn. The dawn is not too far away, and you note that I said the dawn, for it is vast. I do not pretend to have a complete understanding of the infinite. I have only had glimpses of it, but what I have seen is beautiful. It is amazing. I have not words to express and you will not have them either, it is something that is experienced and not voiced, and as you grow and climb higher and higher upon the ladder, you will find more and more that it is not what is said, but what is experienced that gives you the knowledge, the wisdom, and the insight. I am sure this does not satisfy or answer what you would like to know, but there is not much more that I could give you at this time.

Questioner: I certainly appreciate the view it gives me, the feeling of the range of complicity of the structure.

Amos de Phineas: As time passes, your feeling will be more and more pronounced, and as this feeling grows you will begin to have more insight into what it is all about.

Do you have something further?

Questioner: There is one other area that is a large subject. It seems that we have a great void of information dealing with the complexity of ancient times upon this planet and how these times fit into the great cycles of man, the different densities that our planet has moved through, coming up to the time we are in now. Even a sketch of some of these relationships, and of the purposes of the civilizations that have fit in the major pieces of this picture would, I think, be of great help to people that are looking for the light today. I don't know if this is part of our work to help bring some of this information out or not, it has been a matter of thought to us, and I've wondered about it.

Amos de Phineas: The past is of not too great an importance. The only help that the past can be to you is the lessons that you can learn from the errors of the past. There have been, I believe, five civilizations that have come and gone. Many date way back and were perhaps much smaller civilizations than some of the later ones. But always these civilizations have fallen through the error of man. Man has allowed his lower self to become in control of him, and as you know, through the misuse of the laws of nature or the laws of the creator, he has brought about his own destruction. The story of creation is a complex one, it has been told in many ways and each one tells it somewhat differently. The reason for this, I believe, is that various ones are covering a different phase of creation, are covering perhaps only segments of it.

This was a long, long process covering millions and millions and millions of years, perhaps billions of years. There were many phases, but the civilizations that finally grew out of these creations or the souls that ventured into the lower vibration, grew up from various stages, I mean to say, grew up from man in various stages of understanding. Each civilization has been somewhat different both in its spiritual development, its scientific development, and its social development, depending upon several things, upon man's consciousness at that time. This I would say would be the ruling factor and then depending some in which direction he had started his development in the scientific and in the social side. For instance, in the Atlantis Civilization, their development of power, energy to be used went in a different direction than in this civilization, I would say in a much better direction, a much purer direction, in that it did not produce the damage to the environment that yours is producing today. So, each civilization has been of a much different nature in all three sciences.

But in your records that you have of these civilizations there is not enough information that would be too helpful in your own developments of these things. As far as studying these civilizations, I do not see where it would be of great help other than to have knowledge of the past, and to be able to profit somewhat from their mistakes. After all, we live in the present. We have only the now. We cannot bring back the past. We cannot change the past. We can only change the now, and now is the important time. Now is when we can do something about the things we need to do something about. We cannot do it in the future, we cannot do it in the past, we can only do it now. So the most important thing in man's growth, is what he does now, this very moment, this very day. It is the nature of man to say "I will do it tomorrow," to take the line of least resistance but since tomorrow never comes, he will never accomplish this thing he wants to accomplish unless he does it today, And if I were to teach a pupil, I would emphasize that he do it now, for now is the only time that you have.

Could there be anything else that you would like to say?

(No further questions.)

Questioner: We certainly appreciate your comments. We are just to struggle onward, I guess and try to understand as we go.

Amos de Phineas: Let us not say struggle. Sometimes we become discouraged, but let us always look forward and move onward not looking back, for the past is dead.

There is only now and the future, and if we are to be a better man in the future, we must do it now. There has to be a starting point for everything. The starting point is now. We despair, we even cry out at times, But then, we see something in the distance, a great light and we move forward, and our accomplishments are made and again we are happy. There is no greater satisfaction than to reach a goal which one has set, and one must continually set goals and strive to reach them. If our determination is high, we will reach them.

My children, it has been my privilege to spend this time with you tonight.

If I have been of any help or encouragement to you, I am well pleased.

I bless you in your work and encourage you to continue, and assure you that your mentors are helping you in every way they can. ✿
